

The Party Crashe

Dig: Art. Music. Imagination.

Photos by Walter Smith

Dug up any good art lately? The question was never more appropriate than on Saturday during Dig, the fourth in a series of element-themed art shows.

In an old building on West Main Street, art and earth lovers celebrated with drinks, music and good times. Some folks even came dressed in character — by the way, Uma Thurman wants her Poison Ivy-costume back. ♣

Invite The Party Crasher to your next get-together. Send details to email@velocityweekly.com.

Want to see more? Check out the extended photo gallery at www.velocityweekly.com.

▲ Dash-Dash played some Roots covers. Okay, not really.

▲ The be-vined Katie Nagar toted drinks — suming wine was in those caps.

▲ Erin Kinder and Rachel Brewer enjoyed the drinks and the art.

▲ The organizers: Sara Robinette, Teresa Huarte, Amanda Bishop, Cynda Bishop and Jesse Levesque

◀ Sara Robinette went organic.

▲ Kara Warren almost leaned on someone's art.

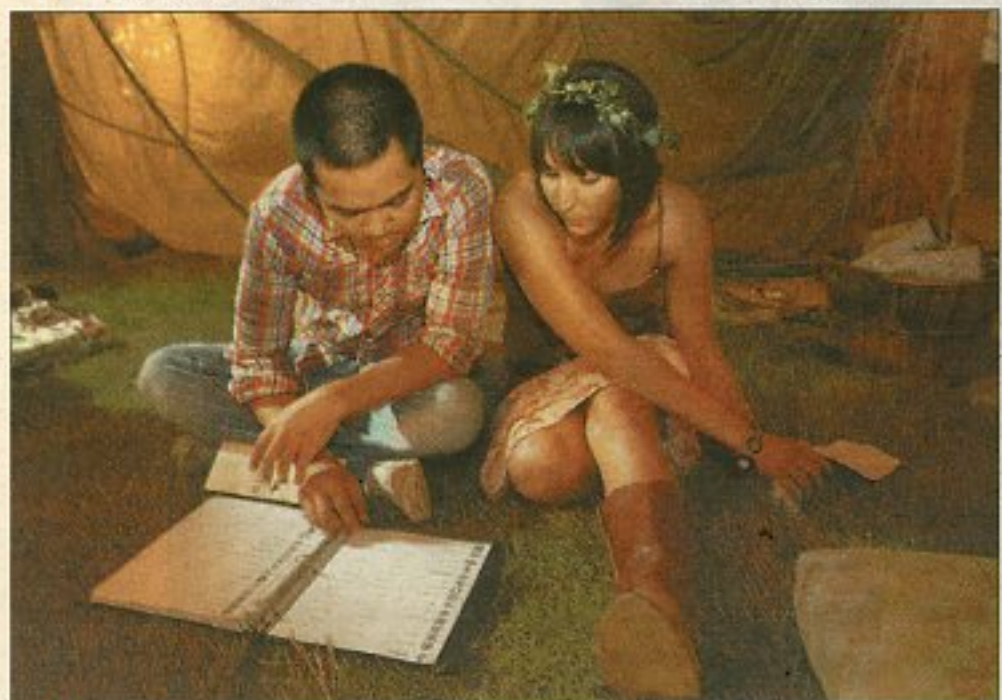

▲ Gillian Mosvold and Kristin Behrle dug up nice poses for the Crasher.

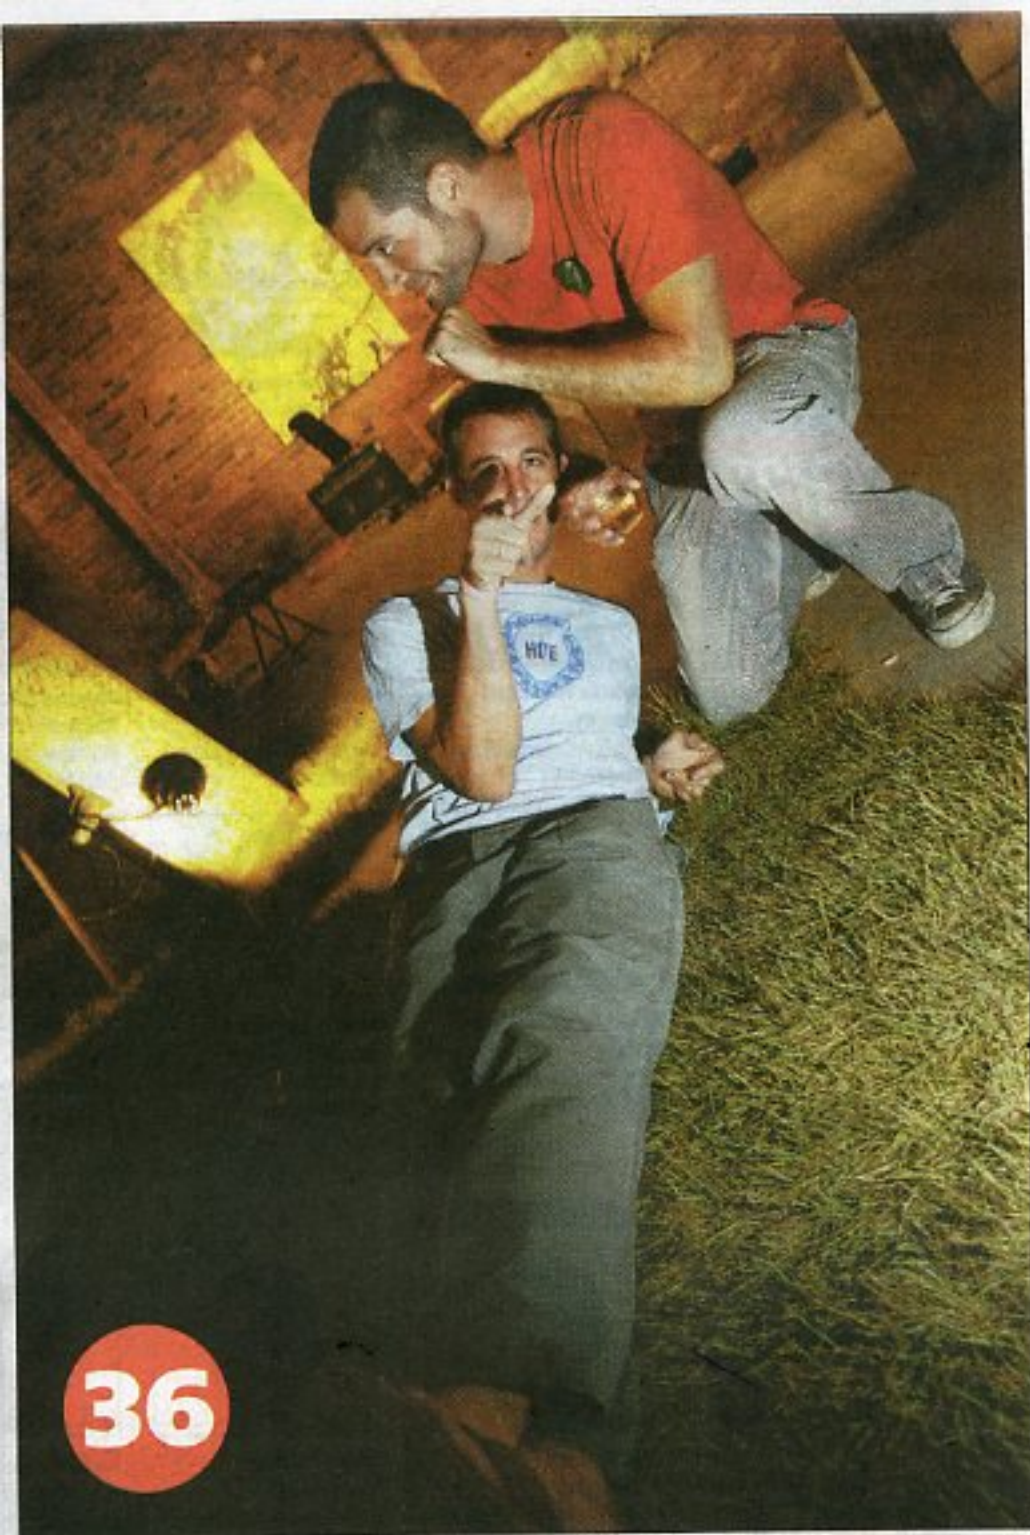

▲ Kate Mobley and De Delarosa were at Dig to support an artist friend.

▲ Adrienne White and Phoenix Lindsey-Hall talked art.

▲ Body art is art, too. Joe Hocog and Mandy Hallberg looked through the Henna tattoo selection.

36

WALTER SMITH

Jed Schneider and Gibbs Rounsavall got back to their roots at Dig: Art. Music. Imagination.